/EINPresswire.com/ -- Several new trends have begun to emerge in the beginning of 2015 for hardwood floors in Toronto. For those who plan to install or replace the current flooring with new, they have several options that will add value to their properties.

As spring approaches, thoughts often turn to updating homes. Whether the homeowner is looking to put the home on the market or just make some changes, it is important to know what is popular. The end result will increase the value of the home if the right choices are made. One of the top trends for 2015 in hardwood floors is a gray hardwood floor. The color is both elegant and rustic and adds a modern touch to a space.

Another option that is growing in popularity is floors with more contrast. This variation may be seen in how the floor contrasts with other features in the home or within the wood itself. Dark tones mix with pale shades for a hardwood floor that makes a strong statement.

Dark hardwood floors are another style that has gained popularity. This design is not just for large spaces anymore. Choose the right tone to fit in any space and add elegance. Two of the most popular choices are ebony and Jacobean. Both provide a contemporary look to a room and can be paired with a variety of design styles.

The natural look is another style that will be popular in 2015. Design experts say that the warm brown and gold tones will continue to replace the reds and oranges of the past. These shades are more versatile and work with a wider variety of colors. They also don't clash with red shades on the walls or in other areas. Natural shades provide more versatility in a room to allow a person to redecorate without having to replace or re-stain the floors.

Buying hardwood floors is an investment. According to Ron Ander with The Hardwood Flooring

Stores in Toronto, it is important to put enough thought into the decision and not pick something in a hurry. "Hardwood floors add value to a home, but they should also be something you can live with for many years if you do not plan to sell," says Ander. Homeowners should ask for a sample and take it home. They can see how it looks in various lighting and with the colors they currently have or are considering.

It is also a good idea to ask an expert designer since they have the experience of working with various colors and design options in large and small rooms like. They can provide advice and ideas that the homeowner would not have thought of alone. While many floors can be sanded and re-stained, it is a large job that most homeowners don't want to tackle. That is why it is important that they find the right design in the first place. It must fit in with the architectural elements of the home and be aesthetically pleasing to ensure no regrets now or in the future.
