Pushing Rabbi, Pastor and an Imam on challenges in promoting co-existence

Washington, D.C., September 13, 2016 -

The American Muslim Institution will have a Rabbi, Pastor and an Imam on one platform in a dialogue to offer pragmatic solutions on the co-existence of humanity, focused on the practitioners of these faiths in Washington, D.C., Maryland and Virginia.

Religion is all about building cohesive societies, most people get that right and a few don't, those who don't get their religion right make God a villain of others.

and bring your friends.

Here are statements from each one of the participants and the President AMI.

Rabbi Charles M. Feinberg said, “Each of the Scriptures of the Abrahamic faiths has passages which I would consider problematic and offensive. It is the responsibility of religious leaders to interpret these passages in a way that promotes justice and peace.”

Imam Mohamad Bashar Arafat said, “The political situation today, nationally and internationally, is making it more difficult for the voices of reason and wisdom to be heard. The word of God has been and will continue to be our refuge in Him from the temptation of our desires and the misunderstanding of our interpretations.”
