Wood fiber or pulp is the principal raw material used in making paper. The pulp is boiled, bleached, strained, flattened, and dried to form a continuous sheet of paper known as a web. Consequently, the web is rolled into spools that can be as wide as 137 inches, and can weigh up to 13,000 lbs. The majority of printing presses make use of papers that are smaller than 137 inches; hence, these rolls need to be cut into the required sizes. The process of cutting the rolls of paper into usable dimensions is known as converting.

Research analysts forecast the global paper converting machine market to grow at a CAGR of 3.5% during the period 2016-2020.
