In an effort to increase efficiency in electric propulsion technology, the concept of RBS was introduced that generates energy from braking. However, RBS is an expensive system involving sensors, ECU, storage devices, and other electronic devices. Hence, adoption of RBS is limited to these segments owing to the requirement of the electric motor.

Research analysts forecast the global automotive regenerative braking system market to grow at a CAGR of 33.24% during the period 2016-2020.

Covered in this report
