The analysts forecast the global food storage containers market to grow at a CAGR of 3.72% during the period 2017-2021.

The food storage container manufacturers are making high investments on R&D to offer the best of designs and materials. They also focus on improving the quality of products, keeping in mind the environmental and sustainability concerns. End-users are also looking for diversification of the uses of food storage containers. Many end-users such as large restaurants prefer to prepare and store food in large quantities to improve their production efficiency. This necessitates the use of food storage containers, which helps save time and cost to end-users. It is important for the end-users to choose the food storage containers that are durable, which helps end-users save on cost, and helps users avoid looking for a replacement after a short period of usage. The containers should be durable so that it should be able to withstand extreme temperature. Also, end-users always look for easier methods of cleaning food storage containers. This becomes one of the key criteria before end-users buy a container. However, they opt for containers that are dishwasher safe. Glass containers are easier to clean and do not retain any odor or stain.
