Market Research Future

Beer is one of the largely preferred alcoholic drinks/ brews worldwide. By and large Beer is brewed from Fermentable carbohydrates of several types such as rice, wheat, maize mixed with ingredients like yeast, water, hops and malted barley, etc. which gives it different color, flavors and taste. Beer is categorized by the ingredients added while brewing, its flavor, production Method (e.g. Draft, ale, lager), color, and origin. Out of which ale and lager are the two commercially popular types. At one time the words beer and ale were not synonymous. In the days before hops became ubiquitous, beer referred specifically to a fermented cereal beverage brewed with hops, while ale was brewed without hops. Today the most commonly used designations are ale and lager, referring to beverages brewed with differing strains of yeast. But both ale and lager are beer.

The Global Beer market has been growing significantly. According to a recent study report published by the Market Research Future, the global beer market is bound to witness an impressive growth in terms of volume and value, with a striking CAGR during the forecasted period (2016 – 2027)

Imported beers and super premium beers have acquired the continuous surge in its popularity among consumers. With the exceeding sales figures of the global beer market, many brands are now experiencing tremendous success owing to the upsurge in the disposable income and changed lifestyle of consumers. Among the regular consumers there includes the health conscious populace too; whose demand has prompted the market for non-alcoholic beers. Established markets are also witnessing intense shifts in the high-calorie beer market trends and have developed a taste for low-calorie beer further, extenuating the niche segment. Similarly, the rising popularity of craft Beer has paved way for new players in the market.

Globally, the market for beer has been increasing due to urbanization and changing consumption patterns. Many micro- brewers are coming up focusing only on the quality of the beer. Key drivers for the market are increasing westernization, developing socializing trends in youngsters. Hence, beer market is expected reach to a substantial growth at the end of the forecasted period with a significant CAGR during 2016 to 2027.
