

Royal Navy to Discuss Developing Effective Maritime Cyber Security Standards to Maximise Use of Naval Assets

SMi Reports: Royal Navy will present on developing effective cyber security standards to maximise use of naval assets at Maritime Information Warfare conference

LONDON, SELECT, UNITED KINGDOM, September 18, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- IN RECENT NEWS: "Warships will soon have computer assistants with a "mind" of their own, according to Britain's First Sea Lord Admiral Sir Philip Jones.

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is set to play a key role in the future of the service, with new ships being equipped with systems similar to Apple's popular "intelligent personal assistant", Siri, he said." Source: Independent*

With that in mind, SMi Group are delighted to welcome the expertise of Commander Neil Hall, SO1 Information Security, at the Maritime Information Warfare conference this December, presenting on: 'Developing Effective Cyber Security Standards to Maximise Use of Naval Assets'.

His focused presentation will discuss: How generating enhanced cyber defence capabilities enables effective strategic deployment of resources; integrating cyber resiliency into standard operating procedures to enable effective operational deployment of maritime forces; recent successes within the Royal Navy at building cyber security and establishing defensible cyber terrain; and going forward: ambitions to assimilate cyber security into the Royal Navy's operational framework as part of Operation Information Warrior.

Following on from this: Artificial Intelligence, Information Exploitation, Autonomous Systems, Big Data, Cyber Security, ISR, C4I and Open Source Intelligence Gathering, will just be some of the key topics covered at this year's Maritime Information Warfare conference.

Taking place in London, attendees will gain an unparalleled opportunity to learn and network amongst senior military and industry in this developing sector.

More featured speakers for 2017 include:

- Vice Admiral Gilday, Commander, US Fleet Cyber Command, US Navy

- Admiral Sir Zambellas, Former Chief of Naval Staff, Royal Navy

+ 13 more senior military and industry experts
