In the early 1980s, US car and truck manufacturers were required to stop installing asbestos lined brake pads or brake linings as it was well known as a hazard to the health of workers. The unfortunate reality is that mechanics or brake technicians were still being exposed to asbestos on auto/truck brakes on a very regular basis until the mid-1990s as the engineering of asbestos components on new vehicles stopped, but the maintenance and repair of them did not.

Auto/truck mechanics or brake technicians in New Jersey who have recently been diagnosed with mesothelioma are urged to call the New Jersey Mesothelioma Victims Center anytime at 800-714-0303 for a very honest conversation about mesothelioma compensation as well as specific attorneys they should be talking to. The mesothelioma attorneys the group suggests are based in New York City.

The New Jersey Mesothelioma Victims Center says, "If we had two vital tips for an auto/truck mechanic or auto/truck brake technician in New Jersey who has been recently been diagnosed with mesothelioma they would be: List the specific brake or auto parts that contained asbestos that you worked with on a regular basis. This is incredibly vital information for extremely skilled mesothelioma attorneys because it is this specific information that becomes the foundation for the mesothelioma compensation claim. Also write down a list of co-workers who witnessed your exposure to asbestos. Again, this is vital information when it comes to a mesothelioma compensation claim as we would like to discuss anytime at 800-714-0303." <http://NewJersey.MesotheliomaVictimsCenter.Com>
