Former Montrose lead singer and event producer, Keith St John says new iconic names are being added to the line-up literally every day. St John was with Montrose for the last 13 years of Ronnie's life. The band was on top of the charts in the 1970s when Sammy Hagar was vocalist, with tunes like Rock Candy, Bad Motor Scooter and Rock the Nation. When St John teamed up with Montrose they continued to entertain until right before his death, filling clubs and festivals around the world. St John wrote many unreleased tunes with Ronnie Montrose, some performed at concerts throughout the

After a long battle with cancer, it has been almost six years since Montrose ended his life and St John wants the guitar greats' legend to continue. "Ronnie's contribution to rock music in the early 70's heavily influenced the up and coming American rock guitarists for next two decades more than he probably ever realized or gave himself credit for. I just want to give those who really appreciate Ronnie the chance to get together in a loving dynamic concert setting where we can really dig in and enjoy each other through the commonality of his music," St John remarks.

One of the event's featured guitar players, Tracii Guns of L.A Guns and Guns N' Roses, says this about Montrose: "I grew up listening to Ronnie from a very young age, and I honestly would like to say that in all sincerity the Montrose song Rock Candy is approximately one third of my entire style of guitar playing. The very first time I saw him play was on the Midnight Special TV show back in the early 70's. The bands raw energy blew me away! Getting to play that song last year with Keith St John, who nails that song with an energy that magically captures the vibe they created it with in the 70's, was a total thrill and my dream come true as a guitar player. This January 27th is destined to be another celebration of pure Ronnie magic. I can't wait!"

Updates to the performer list are being made daily at the event's website www.ronniemontroseremembered.com and on the event's Facebook page.
