

CoreValue Releases "Trigger Control", a New App to Empower the Salesforce platform

Core Value Services, a software engineering and technology company, announces the release of its newest application named Trigger Control.

NEW JERSEY, NEW JERSEY, UNITED STATES, April 6, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- CoreValue Services, a software engineering and technology company, announces the release of its newest application named Trigger Control. The product is built on the Salesforce.com platform, and is a managed package that helps organize triggers in the Salesforce organization.

Our free app enables admins and developers to cut the time required for trigger development, and increase the efficiency of component structuralization. It also provides admins and developers with more control over triggers than was ever possible before.

"We have been into Salesforce (https://corevalue.net/solutions/salesforce-services/) for a long time, and our app started as an idea to make the work with triggers easy," said Mykola Senyk, a Product Owner, "but in the course of development, we realized that it can become the thing of value for developers and users, since we made it simple and intuitive."

The application simplifies work with DataLoader, and allows a basic non-programmer user to see the purpose of any trigger. It also assists in adding and deleting new trigger functionality; ensures a stable order of trigger execution for the same object; and enables isolated testing of separate trigger actions, as well as streamlines the unit test process.

The product is Lightning-ready and supports both Lightning Experience and Salesforce Classic.

The Trigger Control app will be available soon at the AppExchange listing. Admins and developers need a Sales Cloud License to use this package.

CoreValue Services (https://corevalue.net/) is a US-based software and technology services firm with development Labs in CEE, providing Salesforce CRM implementation services, Mobile applications, and Data-powered solutions to Pharmatech, Healthcare and Finance industries.
