Pulp and paper mills typically were built with fire prevention in mind. Most were insulated with asbestos and much of the equipment contained asbestos. Workers at these types of workplaces were exposed to asbestos frequently or on a-daily basis. The workers we are specifically focused on were involved in plant maintenance, or they were a plumber, electrician, or a welder and their job was to keep the mill running.

According to the group, "Many of our nation's pulp and paper mills are-located in smaller cities or rural areas where the top mesothelioma treatment options may not be available. In addition to ensuring a pulp and paper mill worker hires the most capable attorneys we are also urging a person or family dealing with mesothelioma to call us at 800-714-0303 about the best possible medical treatment options in their area or region. We are advocates for people with mesothelioma and our services are free."
